

Editorial

Dear reader!

Thank you for your interest in the Journal of Slavic Languages, Literatures and Culture (SLOVO). While SLOVO is based at the Uppsala University, we welcome contributions from all over the world. Contributions from senior as well as young scholars are welcome. This year, we are especially happy to receive contributions from early career scholars. We are convinced that it is the quality of research that matters, not how highly profiled the authors are. All contributions to SLOVO go through the same process of selection that involves a double-blind peer-review. We hope for even more contributions from younger researchers in the future.

A faithful reader might discover some changes that have been implemented in the current issue of the journal. The issue is divided into two major sections, research papers and other materials including an essay, a book review, memoirs, etc. The editorial board has further decided to abandon the tradition of providing a list of publications by Uppsala Slavists, as well as local news from Uppsala Slavic studies. We chose to do so as this information is currently easily accessible through DiVa and UU-webpage.

For a digital archive of earlier issues, up-to-date information about the journal, as well as guidelines for contributors please refer to our webpage: <https://www.moderna.uu.se/slavic-languages/slovo/>
